Technology has advanced over the years to amazing levels, especially due to improvements in artificial intelligence (AI). AI is changing the way businesses operate in many ways, but the technology's use is not limited to the world of work.
AI-generated artwork has already begun to capture people's attention and imagination. Researchers at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) have shown that AI can also be applied to music. What's more, it can even infer music from silent body movements!

This advanced AI system was named Foley Music and was revealed in 2020. What is unique about it is the fact that it can analyze silent video images of people playing musical instruments. Then, it incredibly generates appropriate sounds to match the visual elements. A data bank that includes different instrument sounds is employed to come up with the final result.

With its sophisticated AI system, Foley Music is by far the most precise system capable of pairing images with sounds. Yet, engineers must still adjust sound levels and time signatures to make the sound more acceptable and pleasurable to the human ear. As the technology improves, the developers of Foley Music expect that this AI will soon have the ability to compose entire songs. In the future, it may be impossible to tell whether a song is created by a person or a machine.

59. Which usage of the word "operate" is closest to the one in the first paragraph?
    (A) Most people can't operate in noisy crowded conditions. .
    (B) Our company operates well after the new CEO took office.
    (C) The surgeon will operate on the patient's heart tomorrow morning.
    (D) The undercover police officer had to operate under the disguise of a drug dealer.
60. According to the article, what is the purpose of the data bank used by Foley Music?
    (A) To teach the AI system how to compose songs.
    (B) To store images of musicians playing instruments.
    (C) To generate appropriate sounds to match visual elements.
    (D) To analyze silent video images of people playing musical instruments.
61. Which of the following activities shown in a video clip can Foley Music analyze to generate sounds?

(A) (B) (C) (D)

For many people over 20 years old, the date of Sept. 11, 2001, is extremely memorable. On that day, the world was shocked to see two airplanes crash into two New York skyscrapers. These attacks, along with two others that caused another passenger plane to crash on American soil that day, resulted in nearly 3,000 deaths. Many people have very vivid memories of exactly what they were doing and where they were when they learned of these attacks. Psychologists refer to these strong recollections as flashbulb memories.

Flashbulb memories don't only occur when tragic events happen. They may also be related to much happier occasions, such as a graduation or the birth of a child. As the name suggests, they are like "snapshots" of important memories, except that they are captured by the mind rather than a camera.

What creates a flashbulb memory? There are several factors that affect these kinds of powerful and long-lasting memories. Psychologists say that the emotions a person feels at the time are among the most significant factors involved. Shocking events like the 9/11 terrorist attacks in New York are quite likely to be flashbulb memories. They would be remembered vividly by a large number of people around the world. On the other hand, other flashbulb memories are much more personal. A special surprise or birthday gift would fit into this category. It's important to remember, however, that studies have shown that they can be influenced by factors such as the passage of time, subsequent information, and individual differences in memory processes. Thus, they are not always exactly recalled.

62. Which paragraph can answer the following questions?(簡答)

Question	Paragraph
Why could the 9/11 attacks contribute to flashbulb memories?	(a)_____
Are flashbulb memories only about sad experiences?	(b)_____

63. 請從文章選出一個單詞（word）填入下列句子的空格，並視語法需要作適當的字形變化，使句子語意完整、語法正確，且符合文意。(填充)

A flashbulb memory is created when someone's mind _____ a significant memory as a camera would.

64. 請從下列 (A) 到 (F) 中，選出能從本文得知的資訊。(多選題)

(A) Flashbulb memories are accurate and lasting.
(B) The 9/11 attacks caused 3,000 people to be injured.
(C) Children have more flashbulb memories than adults.
(D) Psychologists started to notice flashbulb memories after the 9/11 attacks.
(E) People are more likely to have flashbulb memories after shocking incidents.
(F) What one feels plays a significant role in the formation of flashbulb memories.
