V. Discourse Structure (8%; 2% for each)

After a long day at school or work, there is nothing better than coming home to your beloved pet. From cats and dogs to birds and fish, pets are lovely to spend time with and provide great companionship. However, pets are not just good for company; they bring other benefits too.

__(51)__ Perhaps you'd like to go out for a walk around the park, but you're too lazy to get off the couch. Well, dogs make great personal trainers due to the fact that they, too, need daily outdoor exercise to stay healthy. Taking your dog for a walk benefits your pet and encourages you to get some fresh air and physical activity. __(52)__.

A pet can also help lower your stress level and restore calm. By playing with your cat or simply watching fish swim in an aquarium, you can temporarily forget about your worries. Engaging in these activities provides a mental break from the stresses of daily life. Studies have shown that the blood pressure of pet owners tends to be lower than that of people without pets. __(53)__.

Finally, making an animal part of your family can teach you to be more responsible. Owning a pet means you need to care for it and be there when it needs you. This involves feeding, cleaning, and ensuring your pet gets the necessary medical care. These responsibilities can instill a sense of discipline and routine in your life. __(54)__.

In conclusion, pets offer more than just companionship. They can help keep you fit, reduce stress, and teach responsibility. Embracing the joys and duties of pet ownership can lead to a happier and healthier lifestyle.

(A) Dogs, for instance, can help you stay fit.
(B) Remember that pets can bring joy and benefits to your life—as long as you're ready to take on the responsibilities of being a pet owner.
(C) Over time, these walks can improve your overall fitness level and help maintain a healthy weight.
(D) This is because interacting with pets can cause the release of endorphins, the body's natural stress relievers.

VI. Reading Comprehension (8%; 2% for each)

A deepfake is an image or recording altered with AI technology to look or sound real, but it isn't. Many people use this technology for fun, like face-swapping apps that create humorous pictures with friends. Some films have also used deepfakes to bring old movie stars back to life on the big screen.

However, deepfakes can also be dangerous. They can spread false information about world leaders or events. For instance, someone could make a video of a president saying or doing something they never did. Such deepfakes can undermine trust in leaders and the news. In 2019 in Gabon, soldiers tried to take over the country, believing a deepfake video that their president was dead. He was actually alive, and this confusion led to people losing their lives. Deepfakes can also trick people out of money, spread cruel rumors, or harm reputations.

Deepfake technology makes it hard to tell what's real from what's fake, but there are ways to spot them. For example, in group chats or online job interviews, asking someone to turn their head completely to one side can help detect deepfake filters, as most face-mapping filters don't work on a person's profile. Getting someone to wave their hand in front of their face can also break the filter.

In deepfake videos, people often make unnatural eye or head movements, and their voices may not align with their mouth movements. Other signs include unclear backgrounds, or strange-looking skin and hands. If you're still unsure whether a clip is real, companies like Microsoft and Intel have developed programs to help detect deepfakes. There is also a website called Detect Fakes that helps people analyze videos.

In the age of deepfakes, it's important to keep a critical mind and consult many different sources to ensure a video is real. Always fact-check things you see online, especially if they are related to current events or famous people.

55. What was the original purpose of deepfake technology?
(A) Making money.
(B) Education.
(C) Entertainment and movies.
(D) Political persuasion.

56. How does deepfake technology affect people's trust in leaders?
(A) By promoting real events.
(B) By improving news reporting.
(C) By providing more information.
(D) By creating fake videos.

57. Which of the following is NOT a method mentioned in the text for detecting deepfakes?
(A) Checking if the background is clear.
(B) Asking someone to wave their hand in front of their face.
(C) Asking someone to turn their head completely to one side.
(D) Checking if the words in the video are correct.

58. What should we do to avoid being deceived by deepfake videos?
(A) Trust information from friends and family because they are not likely to share false information.
(B) Think carefully about the information and check different sources to verify it.
(C) Completely avoid using social media to prevent exposure to deepfake.
(D) Rely on news channel that you have watched for years as they are familiar.

Part B 混合題 (6 %) (第 61 題請在答案卷上作答。)

We've all heard of the importance of goal setting, but you need to pay attention to the quality of the goals you are setting. Check out these 5 characteristics of a good goal that you should consider as you plan for the months ahead.

- Specificity is key. Don't just say "get healthy," aim for "lose 5 kilos in 2 months."
- Track your progress! Make your goal measurable with numbers or milestones.
- Challenge yourself, but keep practicality and realism in mind. Can you become a millionaire overnight? Probably not. Set achievable goals that push you forward.
- Align your goals with your values. Wanting to be an astronaut is great, but if you hate space, it's not relevant.
- Set deadlines! A time-bound goal creates a sense of urgency and keeps you focused.

By following these steps, you'll transform vague wishes into actionable plans for achievement.

59. What is the main idea of the passage?
(A) Achieving goals is determined by luck and circumstances.
(B) The quality of your goals is more important than just setting them.
(C) Pursuing wealth should be the main goal for effective goal-setting.
(D) Career choices impact the types of goals individuals should set.

60. Based on the passage, how can you make your goals measurable?
(A) By keeping them vague to allow flexibility in achieving them.
(B) By tracking progress with numbers or milestones.
(C) By setting high expectations to push yourself harder.
(D) By avoiding any form of measurement to reduce pressure.
